New York, 10 Sept., 1863.

Dear Garrison,

Sumner delivers his great speech "On our Foreign Relations" here to-night. It is in type, in Boston, in pamphlet form - also in the journal office, <sup>whence</sup> ~~where~~ it will be issued to-morrow morning; also in the daily papers here. It is very long - so long as to be beyond our limits, unless we could afford to give up ~~the~~ the whole of one side or the other of our papers, to the exclusion of all variety. I have proposed to Mr. Lindsai of The Tribune to print it for me in the shape of an extra for next week's paper, and let me pay him for the same in advertising. He seems inclined to do it. Now, why would <sup>it</sup> not be a good thing for you to supply the readers of the Liberator on the same terms? To each would have to be paid, except for transportation of the sheets hence to Boston. It could be worked with the head -

Liberator - Extra.

If you would like to do this, telegraph me to that effect to-morrow (Friday), and tell me how many copies to work.

In jumping haste,

W. Johnson.

Oliver Johnson.
